Subject: RE: Jervis B. Webb Company of California document review

Jim:

Jervis B Webb Company is paying for the storage of Webb California documents at Corrigan, because Webb California no longer exists as an entity and we did not want to destroy documents. Jervis B Webb Company is not asserting ownership of the documents, but is acting as a temporary custodian. Jervis B Webb Company is aware of EPA's request to maintain and preserve the documents, and will continue to do so.

Michael, on a related issue to the document review: Our team inquired unsuccessfully of Corrigan as to who was paying for the storage of the Webb California documents and asserting ownership. We need to know this information. By prior correspondence to you we have advised JWB of the requirement to maintain and preserve those records, but if some other person or entity is the proprietor we need to send that same message to the proper person. It seems a waste of time to propound a new 104(e) request to JWB and/or to Corrigan, although we will do so if necessary. Can we resolve this issue informally?
